Many people in Middle Tennessee have enviable wine cellars and if you have always desired one, there is a company which specializes in making that fantasy come true.

CellarMaker is a design firm and full service contractor which builds distinguished wine cellars for homes, restaurants and wine stores, according to the company's owner Scott C. Hughes.

"You can turn any closet, storage room or unused space in your home into the wine cellar of your dreams," said Hughes. "Whether you have just a few wines or thousands of bottles, our goal is to create a unique wine cellar for you that not only reflects your storage needs but also includes elements of design that capture your personal taste."

CellarMaker offers knowledgeable, specialized guidance, and professional design services to help you build the right wine cellar.

"Putting together a collection of wine can be a complicated and expensive process," Hughes said, "so creating the correct environment is essential to protect the taste of each individual wine. And many will tell you the longer you hold on to a wine, the more delicious it will become."

"A custom wine cellar from CellarMaker will not only help you safeguard your collection of fine wines but also will become a great source of enjoyment to your friends and family. When planning your cellar we discuss all the different options available and find out what you specifically are looking for," according to Hughes. "We can create a beautiful custom wine cellar to fit your particular needs and showcase your portfolio of fine wines, which will enhance the value of your home."

"We offer a wide variety of wine rack systems, kit racks to furniture grade wine racks and Vintage View systems, which display the bottle labels in full view so it's easy to find a particular bottle and your wine cellar becomes alive with the beautiful artwork of the labels," said Hughes.

"Custom wine racks and exotic tasting tables are available to suit your individual needs. We understand each client has collections of different sizes and wants to exhibit his or her wines in a special way," he said.

CellarMaker knows wine collectors take the pursuit very seriously and offers several ways to enhance each client's collection. "We offer one-on-one lessons from a wine professional and can assist with wine selection, procurement and development of taste profiles for our clients," said Hughes.

"The company can provide a wine professional to conduct a private tasting party in your home or even build a custom travel itinerary to areas known for producing outstanding wines."

"Free consultations are available and we will show you why our wine racks are the perfect complement to your home, restaurant or business," Hughes said.

"We gladly will sit down with you and find out exactly what type of wine cellar will suit your needs. It is important to us to accent your collection with wine racks to display your wine in a way your friends, colleagues and customers will admire and appreciate. Each bottle of wine has its own unique story, and after your wine cellar is complete you will have a special place to store your memories and create new ones!" Hughes added.
